

ROBERT NALL EXPLAINS
"SCIENTIFIC HEALING"

Writes Extensive Article for Christian Science Sentinel.

Robert Nall says:
"How do we define health? What mental concept presents itself as we think of health? What are the criteria by which we judge of its nature and quality? To be free from physical trouble, to be blessedly exempt from medical attention, from the need of any of the remedies catalogued in the pharmacopoeia—this, the average man claims, entitles him to be classed as healthy. This is where the Christian Scientist was before the scales fell from his eyes and he awoke from his material dream. He now has a wider vision; his perception and his realization of health have broadened into the manifestation of the activity of good, into the operation of divine principle.
"It is a tribute to the divine authenticity of Christian Science that while in its demonstration it is ready to give us all we need, it deprives us of nothing that is of any worth. The mental faculties, when clarified by the metaphysical process, present many things in a new light; these are cognized from a different viewpoint. Life itself takes on a richer hue, and the present, in contrast with the past and the future, assumes its rightful paramount place in the daily and hourly recognition of truth's rule over its expression.
"If we have arrived at this point in our understanding of Science, it is quite certain that we are establishing what Mrs. Eddy calls 'the scientific sense of health' (Science and Health, p. 77), and we are privileged to interpret this in the most comprehensive way. 'Wilt thou be made whole?' is a question that Truth submits to every one at some time or other. It is the voluntary offer of divine love to the physical sufferer, those in despair, to every victim of mortal passion, to all who are unconsciously adding to their torments by the fear of a score of things that never happen.
"Christian Science in its expression of divine truth by its very nature cannot discriminate in its blessings. Mortal thought alone discriminates; it cannot do otherwise. It holds that matter is the arbiter of life, which dictum covers the scope of its provision for man's welfare, and matter being but a mental phenomenon, without power or reality, it is the acme of futility to depend upon it for health. Whether you think of health in its narrowest or in its broadest meaning, it is never a product of that which has no place in the divine economy. If, therefore, we are not healed by God, as our leader over and over again emphasized, then we are not healed at all.
Christian Science Impartial.
"But with the enlarged understanding which follows the apprehension of spiritual truth, it is seen that physical health takes a subordinate place in the great redemptive work of divine principle, although popular thought erroneously credits Christian Science with giving it the primary place. God taught humanity through Christ Jesus, and is still teaching men through Christian Science, that all healing, whether physical, moral or spiritual, is the result of the mental transformation which attends the advent of the Christ-consciousness.
"There is a wholesome lesson to be learned here. No one wants to limit acceptance of God's royal bounty. Therefore the Christian Scientist can testify by both precept and example, in the measure of his spiritual perception and his mental grasp of the truth, that it is the emphatic mission of Christian Science to restore the spiritual selfhood, to bring to light 'the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.' Turn the world largely thinks otherwise, even when confronted by demonstrable facts. The only way to convince the world that it is wrong is to go on demonstrating; to show that in the whole gamut of error's dominating ways, in the long list of moral wrecks that strew the path of evil's influence, there is no erroneous mortal condition so hopeless or desperate that it is not amenable to the healing potency of truth.
The Prayer of Faith.
"To be wholly and absolutely on God for every thing, to give thanks to Him for everything, to be in constant infallible evidence that the power of faith, that is, of understanding, has healing efficacy; to attest by the outward and of disease and the destruction of sin, by unmistakable ethical effects, and by a spiritual change which reveals the impersonal idea of good—to do all this as showing that the divine purpose is being fulfilled in each one of us as we come to a right understanding of God and ourselves, gladly to His will, is to have a noble part in the ministry of scientific healing. And can the recipient of love's healing balm do otherwise? 'A faithful ambassador is health,' said the wise man of old; or, to put it in another way, he that rejoices in some conception and expression of the divine wholeness, which is his real being in truth, will be, to quote the marginal reading of the text above quoted, 'an ambassador of faithfulness.'
"But are there not Christian Scientists who lament that their practical application of the truth does not attain within even measurable distance of their ideals? This mental attitude, if unduly maintained, may become a burden and a hindrance, that is, in belief. Then it is time to ask ourselves whether we are really seeking to conform to Divine Love's standard, whether our faith has so grown into knowledge, and our knowledge into understanding, that spiritual law is as available and operative now as it was when Jesus demonstrated it. A powerful and spiritual study of the supreme purpose of the life and work of Jesus, and a closer knowledge of the gradual unfolding of the truth to our leader, often serve to dissipate the mists of fear, doubt and discouragement which tend to encumber the upward path. Mortal thought obscures and debases. Spiritual or scientific thought enlightens, teaches and elevates. Its healing lies not only in the purity of its design, embodied in the reconciliation of man to God, but in its direct simplicity."

Editorial
A Most Attractive Scarecrow

Once a farmer, harassed by the lack of success of his homemade scarecrows, decided to have a real one made by a figure maker. It was a work of art, almost human enough to speak.
Erected in the middle of a cornfield, the birds eyed it with suspicion, but not for long, and then held a convention to discuss what and what their new friend might be. And when they found it without life, every bird helped itself to corn. Some of the more venturesome birds even made so bold as to sit on the head and arms of the LIFE-LIKE Scarecrow.
There are corn fields, and other well-filled fields, so to speak, this time of year, filled with things for dress and the home—and not a scarecrow of a wrong price or a discourteous attendant to frighten any one away.
The above is doubly true of this store—THE STORE OF GREATER SERVICE.
There are corn fields, and other well-filled fields, so to speak, this time of year, filled with things for dress and the home—and not a scarecrow of a wrong price or a discourteous attendant to frighten any one away.
